Mr. Dekerson, the coroner, is about to remove to the vicinity of Filbert and Ninth street, his present location in Poplar Lane not being sufficiently central. The arduous duties of the office of coroner are per-formed with singular faithfulness by Mr. Dickerson, and it is granifying to find that the community at large duby agreeins his afficient.

Bot of Mr. A. was astomshed at the mexpected character of the reply, a ill greater was he astomshment to find, on looking in the face of the gentleman who held his arm, that his congisation was an extre estrange? In the continuon incident to the passage through the observation on the pavenent, Mr. A. and Mr. C. had each larged partners and become companions.

The truth is, as we honestly believe, there is no real necessary for one half the parsels and show, that many of our merchants make before their premises, and it would be much more becoming it they would keep their assortment of goods made of their stores, rather than permit the sade walks to be lombered up with beans and packagens, to the great isomsvenence at a foods passengers. On some occasions, in hosy times, as we are well aware, merchants who transacts is also believes amount of business, are compelled to encroach on the paveness; and they can be well aware, merchants who transacts is shoot, and they can have their goods intravired; and of these, we apprehend, there is no one disposed to complain, provided the merchant takes up no more space than is independently necessary. But there, is not one many than the complaint against those who have assained in the prepare of estentiations paradic, ship pile to empty house, in front of their stores, with no other effects than that of impeding the progress of street passengers.
